The experience, education and training I had in my life constantly emphasized the importance of a sense of personal responsibility. I was far from perfect, but I am actively trying to resist the trap of blaming others. This is a valuable key to keep us focused on our goals, goals and objectives rather than the conditions of the path. Dr. Ben Carson is constantly sharing this valuable key to his professional maturity. Introduced him in his early childhood to his mother, she made him read this poem every time he made excuses, whining or complaining. It is a simple poem that was the catalyst for his amazing life. I hope it can provide similar ideas and inspiration to you. Yourself to blame Mayme White Miller If things go wrong for you and make you a little ashamed Often you find out that you are to blame and quickly we ran to evil and then bad luck came Why do we blame others? It's our own fault . . . whatever happens to us, that's what we're saying. If things hadn't gone that way. And if you don't have enough friends, I'll tell you what to do make an examination, you will find flaws in you . . . environment rather than accepting APPROPRIATE NEXT ACTION needs to create the life we want to live. It is very easy to fall into the trap of blaming others or regularly feeling victimized. The next time you get headed in this direction, think about this poem: do the expertise and see what you find. No excuses. You are the captain of your ship. You can do it! By looking, doing an examination, you'll probably find that there's AN APPROPRIATE NEXT ACTION that you can take, and you already have everything you need (including permission). ACT NOW!-Take APPROPRIATE NEXT ACTION that will bring you closer to your goal. Only those who act will win! THE QUESTION: How do you catch yourself from falling into the trap of blaming others? People hardly want to take responsibility for the shortcomings and misadventures in their lives. We blame our parents, spouses, children, friends, bosses, colleagues, employees, enemies, our pets, and everything else except ourselves. The truth is, no one can stop you from doing what you want if your mind is really focused on it. People no one else makes you fail, you only have yourself to blame. True achievements, all truly great people know this truth. They take responsibility for their lives, only the losers blame others. If you find yourself always blaming others for most of the results in your life, why don't you try studying your actions or inaction in events that have yielded results, you may find, as I have done too many times, that you are responsible for everything that happens in your life. Below is a beautiful Maym White Miller called Myself to blame read it, remember it, and let it become part of because there are many truths in it: If things go wrong for you and make you a little ashamed Often you find out that you yourself are to blame Swiftly we ran for evil and then bad luck came Why do we blame others?
